BLACK HISTORY MONTH ARTWORK ‘21

“I think there are many examples that one can look at in the history of photography (and more broadly the history of art) of black people being represented by others, not having a chance to represent themselves”

Marta Weiss, Senior Curator, Photographs at Victoria and Albert Museum

As part of Black History Month Ms Goodwin and the Visual Arts Bursary students discussed the importance of photographic collections throughout history. Students were then given a selection of photographs which have been a prominent part of documenting black history taken by black photographers, to rework and celebrate. Students looked at current black collage artists for inspiration. The following outcomes are bold, lively and inventive artworks which we hope you enjoy.
